Section 3 Making Off Without Payment

'(1) ... a person who, knowing that payment on the spot for any goods supplied or service done is required or expected from him, dishonestly makes off without having paid as required or expected and with intent to avoid payment of the amount due shall be guilty of an offence.

(2) For purposes of this section "payment on the spot" includes payment at the time of collecting goods on which work has been done or in respect of which service has been provided.

R v McDavitt (1981)

The defendant had an argument with the manager of a restaurant and refused to pay his bill for a meal. He got up and started to walk out but was advised not to leave as the police had been called. He then went into the toilet and stayed there until the police arrived. He had not 'made off' as he was still in the restaurant.

R v Allen (1985)

The defendant owed £1286 for his stay at a hotel. He left without paying, but his defence was that he genuinely intended to pay in the near future as he was expecting to receive sufficient money to cover the bill from business transactions. His conviction was quashed because it had not been proved that he intended to evade payment altogether.

R v Wilkinson (2018)

A taxi driver refused to let a passenger out of his cab as he had had an argument with her. He drove her back to where he had first picked her up, rather than to her destination. As he had not provided the service for which she had asked, which was to be taken to her home address, she was under no obligation to pay, so payment on the spot was not required.

R v Barton and Booth (2020)

The Court of Appeal confirmed that the test for dishonesty in criminal cases was: 1 What was the defendant's actual state of knowledge or belief as to the facts? 2 Was their conduct dishonest by the standards of ordinary decent people?
